

Overview

When strong professional learning systems support educators in implementing high-quality curriculum and instructional materials, more students have access to effective teaching and learning - and better student outcomes are the result. That premise drives the What Matters Now Network, a collaboration of state-based coalitions that include educators at the school, district, and state levels engaging in cycles of continuous learning with coaching and support. The Network is grounded in the vision established in the 2016 National Commission for Teaching & America's Future (NCTAF) report What Matters Now: A New Compact for Teaching and Learning.

Unique Components

The work of the What Matters Now Network is unique in its focus on these essential components:

